Hostel Market Trends

December 2015

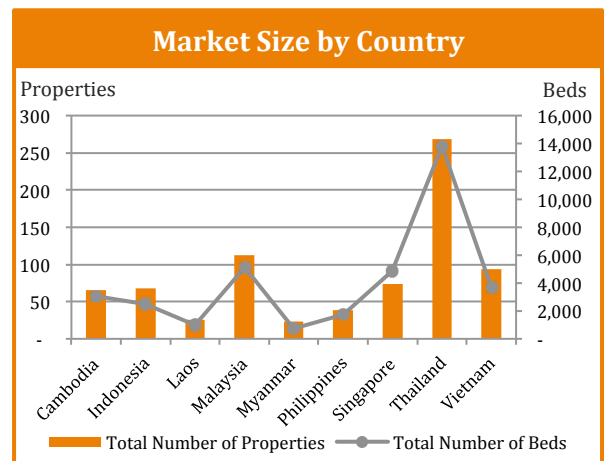

Fast growing segment erupts into mainstream accommodation market

Domesticated travel sectors key to hostel supply expansion

“Skyrocketing growth of low-cost airlines and an evolving middle class in Asia are leading a second generation of new hostel offerings. At the upper end of the product range poshtels and hybrids are now becoming a competitor to the traditional budget and economy lodging sector.

The market-size of international level hostels in Southeast Asia stands at 770 properties with 36,480 beds. Hostel owners compete through incorporating innovative designs and accommodating facilities to create greater appeal.

Our methodology for market research into the sector has been to filter out guest houses, B and B's and homestay accommodation to establish a market-wide metric to benchmark data in this emerging segment.

Market Trends

- Market-wise the Average Daily Rate per Bed is US $10 but the Average Daily Rate per Room is US $40.
- Properties in proximity to CBD areas or locational demand generators are travelers' preferred choices.
- Rising demand from friends and families traveling together as well as school and sporting groups.

Forward Outlook

- More hostel operators are trading in both hostel and conventional hotel space to capture expanded target markets.
- Domestic inter-country travel within most SEA nations is the most prolific growth segment in the budget and economy tier.
- Further regional integration such as the AEC will propel growth of more cross-border hostel investments.

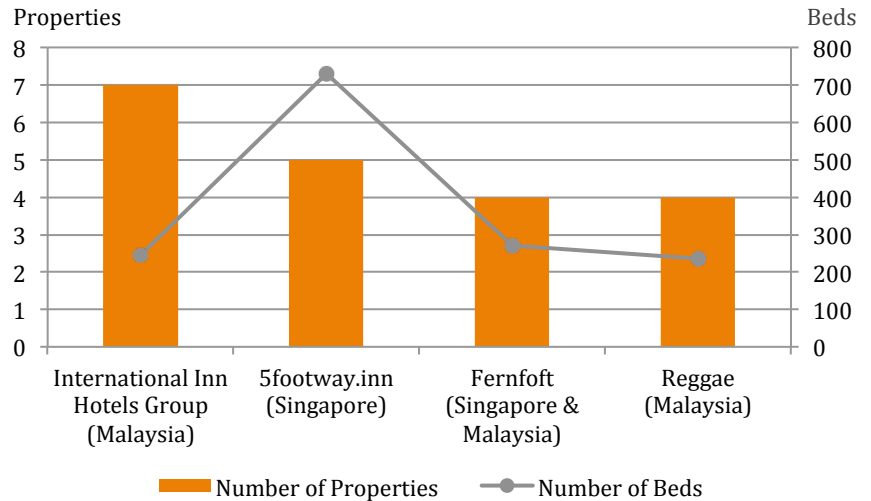

MARKET OVERVIEW

Highlights on Regional Operators

- Most hostels are owned by individual investors and generate income by means of conversions versus new-build properties. There is an increasing trend of chain hostel operators such as Thailand based Lub.d.

PERFORMANCE INDICATORS

Key Characteristics

- The pricing drivers of hostel offerings is relevant to operating costs, real estate and the quality of the product.

- Whilst shared rooms with common bathrooms continue to be the legacy hostel model, operators are now increasing the number of private rooms with individual bathrooms as well as design-led facilities in order to attract a wider clientele which puts hostels increasingly in competition with budget and economy hotels.
